There are prerequisites to consider with an online class: Students should type at least 10 words per minute (knowledge of the keyboard) as well as the ability to use the left and right mouse button. Ideally participants have two screens, a computer with Excel to follow along and practice class tests, and a separate screen to watch the instructor's computer. The separate screen can be a cell phone, but better if it's a larger screen like an iPad or tablet. If you connect your computer to a television, then that is often large enough to split the instructor's screen on one side with Excel on the other side.

The instructor will teach with a Windows computer. Students can use an Apple computer and the instructor will highlight the differences in keyboard shortcuts.
